

*Isaac Harris Cary Memorial Building
Lexington MA*

The Cary Memorial Building is a 1927 public meeting hall that holds a prominent location in Lexington. The facility was built as “a fireproof building adapted to and suitable for the safe storing and care of revolutionary relics and treasures ... and to contain a hall adapted to lectures and public meetings.”

Mills Whitaker Architects was retained to evaluate and rehabilitate this facility to improve the 800-seat auditorium, historic exhibit spaces, multi-use meeting rooms, building systems and accessibility provisions while integrating them into the historic fabric. The improvements better serve the needs of Town Meeting, Lexington Symphony Orchestra, celebrity concerts and a variety of other public events.
